This training is offered to improve the effectiveness of our federal managers, supervisors, and Young Government Leaders – helping you enhance your leadership skills, as you work to make a positive impact on your work environment; improving your organization’s climate of performance and its ability to serve the public. Built upon OPM’s Executive Core Qualifications, the leadership skills taught during this 2-day experience will encourage the development of the methods and personal behaviors that will make an important contribution to your leadership agenda.

Motivation: A climate where people are engaged, well-directed, responsive, and enthusiastic.

Research shows there’s a direct relationship between employee engagement and bottom-line results. It also shows there’s a disconnect between what managers believe makes employees enthusiastic about work, and what employees are really looking for. Learn how to tailor your leadership agenda depending on the situation and individual needs within your organization.

Teamwork: Establishing the climate for high-functioning groups.

Working successfully in a group goes well beyond gathering together the best individual contributors – it requires an understanding of ‘personal’ chemistry, along with a certain emotional intelligence allowing the leader to construct an environment that is conducive to performance and accountability. A leader’s first responsibility is to unify and direct the team.

Trust: Without it ... the climate is out of control.

Trust is dependent on individuals and their experiences – especially those involving direct interactions with others. In places where employees trusted their leadership ... they had a significantly higher performance rating than those found in less trusting environments. Effective leadership requires the ability to establish, and maintain a foundation of trust.
